Created by the cultural association dotART, Short Street Stories was conceived as an ambitious group homage to the sardonic style of Martin Parr, Nick Turpin and the photography collectives In-Public, Un-posed and Burn My Eye.

Photos and projects that are exclusively street and look at the contemporary society with humor and satire. An “anthropologic” photography, playful and ironic, telling us about the modern world, its current changes and social differences from a different perspective.

A unique and significant project consisting of a prestigious photobook and an international collective exhibition.

172 authors from all over the world are involved, selected among the 530 and more that applied for the Exhibit Around open call back in December 2018.

Besides them, a very special guest, Nick Turpin! He did us the honor to open the Short Street Stories book with some of his pictures. Bringing together a master and the followers of his work, we can say that we managed to square the circle.

The authors included in Short Street Stories showed that they have learned the lesson of the great street photographers. They now reinterpret it following their own style and sensibility.

Short Street Stories has culminate in Trieste Photo Days festival in October 2019, with the collective exhibition of over a hundred photos in the “Umberto Veruda” Hall of Trieste City Municipality, and the book presentation in the – not fortuitous – presence of our guests of honor Martin Parr and Nick Turpin, the two artists to whom the project pays homage.

The “frame” of the trams’ windows and the framed people interplay with their structure designs and graffiti and their expressions, gestures, movements and sights build up a series of visual interconnections between the real passengers and the “street art”.
